CODVILLE LANDING – SUMAS – CHILLIWACK

For further information see Cecil C. Coutts Cancelled with Pride 1993

Codville Landing Post Office was located on Nicomen Island on the north side of the Fraser River halfway between Fort Langley and Fort Hope. James Codville opened a small store, and mail steamers called regularly at the landing to offload freight for the farming settlements on the south side of the river.

On July 9, 1865, Governor Douglas authorized the establishment of the Codville Landing post office with Mr. James Codville as postmaster. The post office lasted less than a year. According to A.S. Deaville the post office was re-established on September 1, 1872, as Chilliwack., although the Chilliwack post office is not listed in the post offices transferred to the Canadian Post Office in July 1871 at the time of the visit of Gilbert E. Griffin, Canadian Post Office Inspector for the territory west of Hamilton.

SUMAS – earliest reported date – October 20, 1873 - Keenlyside collection

Note – first hammer reads B. C. not Brit. Col. as previously reported.

SUMAS – CHILLIWACK

Cecil Coutts in his book Cancelled with Pride quotes from the October 30, 1867, issue of the British Columbian, a New Westminster newspaper, that a post office had been opened at Sumas (sic) Landing with David Miller as postmaster. The landing was located at the mouth of the Sumas River and in later years the post office was located in a stone building downstream from the mouth of the river. A unique feature of the building was that a mail slot had been built into the front wall of the post office area. The Sumas post office moved to Atchelitz in 1912.

CHILLIWACK

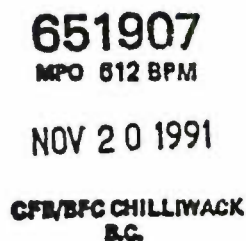

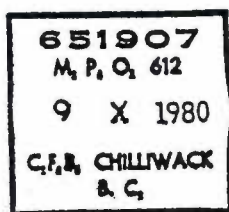

The establishment of the Chilliwack post office presents a problem. Although it is listed in Deaville as opening 1 September, 1872, with J. McCutcheon as postmaster, it is not included in the list of post offices established in 1871 by Mr. Griffin nor is it listed in the 1872 Postal Guide. In fact the only reference that George Melvin could find showed that Mr. McCutcheon resigned July 1, 1874.

Earliest reported postmark from Chilliwack is dated June 16, 1876.
CHILLIWACK /JU 16 / 76 / B.C.

Initially the Chilliwack post office was located at the home of John McCutcheon some distance from the center of activity near Chilliwack Landing located near the mouth of Hope Slough. In 1874 the Chilliwack post office moved to a store operated by Robert Craig Garner near the mouth of Hope Slough. In 1876 the post office was relocated to a nearby store operated by William Robert McDonald. The McDonalds continued to operate the post office until 1883 when it moved to the nearby Ashwell Store. With the completion of the Yale Road the center of activity moved from the river to the Yale Road, and the post office was moved to a location on the Yale Road at what became known as the Five Corners. The post office is still located on Yale Road.

VANCOUVER POSTAL ZONES

Following the Second World War the volume of mail being handled by the Canadian Post Office, particularly in larger centres such as Toronto and Montreal, was reaching the point that delays in delivery were far too common. During the war the Canadian Post Office became familiar with the British postal zone system in London where each sorting area had a distinct postal code. In Britain the mail was moved to a number of smaller offices where sorters only processed local mail, as a result they needed to know far fewer sorting routes and mail moved much more quickly. The system in Britain had been in use in London since the turn of the century and had gradually been extended to serve all major cities in the United Kingdom.

In Canada, Letter Carrier Depots had been introduced before the First World War, and these Letter Carrier Depots did the local sorting much the same way as was done in Britain. Thus in the late 1940s the Canadian Post Office realized that if each Letter Carrier Depot was assigned a zone number to be used as part of the address the initial sort could be done by zone number rather than address and the result would speed up the sorting process. All that was required was a minor reconfiguration of the existing Letter Carrier Depots to accommodate the new method of sorting.

Vancouver initially was divided into 16 zones but, due to the consolidation of some Postal Stations only 14 numbers were used for the city of Vancouver. The map on the next page shows the boundaries of the 14 zones, each of which represents a Letter Carrier Depot, usually located in a Postal Station. For example, Postal Station G was identified as Zone 8 and served UBC and the northwest segment of the city. To promote the use of the postal zone numbers a series of slogan cancellations was introduced in larger centres where the postal zone number were required.

POSTMASTER

The Postal Zone system worked well, but as sorting equipment in the major post offices became more efficient the need to sort mail in the Letter Carrier Depots declined and a more sophisticated postal code was needed. In March of 1969 an all numeric code similar to the American Zip Code was proposed. In the end the US numeric code was rejected and the alpha-numeric code in use today was introduced.

CANADA TO ADOPT ZIP CODE

Mail Zones Will Change

Mail zone numbers will be changed here by June to speed mail sorting and delivery, a post office spokesman announced Thursday.

The new zone numbers will be forerunners of a national mailing code system similar to the "zip code" used now by the U.S. post office.

The whole Lower Mainland west of the Langley-Surrey border will be affected by the changeover, said Jack Morrow, information officer for the Vancouver post office.

Most major Canadian cities have already been rezoned, he said.

The new zoning code will mean that large cities such as Montreal with heavy volumes of mail for Vancouver will be able to do initial sorting for specific zones within Vancouver.

This will eliminate the second sorting now necessary at the post office here.

Morrow said rezoning of major cities is the first step needed to introduce a national code system.

"It is a matter of tying together the city zones when the need arises."

Computerized sorting may be feasible within a few years under the new system.

The post office estimates that all major cities will be under the new code by 1971.

Large business firms have been advised of their new zone numbers so they can change their letterheads.

Residents will be informed by means of advertisements in the press and information flyers to all homes.

Vancouver zone numbers will be 100 to 199; West Vancouver, 200 to 250; North Vancouver, 251-299; Burnaby, 400-499; Richmond, 300-399; New Westminster, 500-599; Delta, 700-799; Port Moody, 601; Coquitlam, 611-654; Port Coquitlam, 673-674; Surrey, 800-890, and White Rock, 894.

Sun. Morning 21, 1969

The present alpha-numeric postcode was introduced over a four-year period starting in Ottawa on April 1, 1971, and was introduced in British Columbia in 1974.
